And without saying good morning, and putting his hat on in | her presence, Watson left the room.

Alicia sat stunned, but dimly conscious of the indignity and affront put upon her. She was of a caste accustomed to all the niceties of respect, and she had managed to retain them until now. She began to ask herself, if she received such treatment from Watson, what might she expect from the whole world? And then, there was an awful sense of loss the mere absence of her husband Often during the four years of her last marriage it had seemed to her as if her husband was the person who put everything out of joint. She had her establishment, her money, her liberty, and could do as she pleased, which was freely granted her, and life would have been delightful, but close to her always was this man before whom she must ever act the part of a perfectly upright woman. It was that which had produced the curious sense of dislocation ment seemed greater than ever. She however, she had a strong card to play from his beloved Washington.

FINAL CHAPTERS TO-MORROW.

This charming story of Washington life, "The Dainty Lady Lucy," which began in The Washington Herald of October 8, and which has daily held the interest of Washington readers, will be completed in to-morrow's (Sunday) issue of this paper. The complete set of papers containing the story, which has not yet been published in book form, may be obtained at this office. There are thirteen issues-October 8 to 20, inclusive.

"You must not speak of such things," she said coldly, and rising.
Colegrove rose, too. He had implanted the notion in her mind that March, after all, had sacrificed her, and that she was nothing to him. A new expression came into Alicia's speaking eyes. She looked nothing to him. A new expression came into Alicia's speaking eyes. She looked fixedly at Colegrove, and then bent her head in reflection.

REV. IGNATIUS JOSEPH FEALY,

Assistant Pastor of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church.

Rev. Father Ignatius Joseph Fealy, of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Second and C streets northeast, is one of the youngest Roman Catholic priests in Washington, and the United States. Though young in years, he is credited with being especially energetic, and since his assignment to St. Joseph's, his first mission, less than three years ago, he has merited the esteem of the entire congrega-tion. Under the direction of Father Valentine F. Schmitt, he has been the means of stimulating renewed interest in the parish, largely depleted through the coming of the Union Station. Additional interest attaches to his career for the reason that he is a Washingtonian, and comes of a family that has long made this city its home. His parents migrated to Osage County, Mo., in the early '70's, and he was born there July 31, 1878. A few years after his birth the family returned to this city, and Father Fealy, on reaching the school age, was enrolled in St. Aloysius' Parochial School. His rise was rapid, and after completing the preparatory studies, matriculated at Gonzaga College. He served as an altar boy at St. Aloysius', and when Cardinal Satolli opened the papal legation at Second and I streets northwest, he was selected to serve at the cardinal's mass in his private chapel. Valuable books were at his disposal, and he began fitting himself for the priesthood. In 1894 he matriculated at St. Charles' College, going from there to St. Mary's Seminary. He was ordained December 17, 1904, at St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Baltimore, and celebrated his first low mass the following Sunday at St. Agnes' Sanatorium, Baltimore. Christmas Day, 1965, he sang his initial solemn high mass at St. Aloysius', when Mgr. Falconio was present in cap and miter.

Father Fealy is chaplain of Potomac Council, Knights of Columbus, and is deeply interested in the Holy Name Society, an organization whose object is to suppress profanity. He thinks the Union Station and other improvements around St. Joseph's Church will, in time, redound to the benefit of the parish. Father Fealy is fond of athletics, and loses no opportunity to promote clean sport. He
